BARBARA J. BROWN, associate director of program coordination for the Research Libraries Group, has been named head librarian at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. She replaces Maurice D. Leach Jr., who resigned to become director of a newly-created Friends of the Library organization at Washington and Lee.

Brown was head reference librarian at Washington and Lee from 1971 to 1976, and at Cornell University for seven years before that. She left W&L in 1976 to become assistant university librarian for general reader services at Princeton University. She held that post in 1980 when she accepted a position at the Research Libraries Group.

While at Washington and Lee she developed a bibliographical resources course and served as chairman of the board of publishers of W&L's literary journal, Shenandoah. In 1974 she was one of five librarians in the United States selected by the Council on Library Resources for a year's study at the UCLA Library.

Brown holds an MLS from Columbia University and an undergraduate degree from Iowa State University.

JOHN D. GABOURY has been appointed university librarian and director of learning services at Northeastern Illinois University, effective August 1.

Gaboury served as director of learning resources at Clayton Junior College, Morrow, Georgia, before coming to Northeastern. He also served as director of the Learning Resources Center at North Shore Community College, Beverly, Massachusetts.

A native of New York City, Gaboury earned his bachelor's degree in broadcasting and educational media from the University of Florida and his MLS from Florida State University. He also holds a doctorate in education from the University of Massachusetts.

NEW TECHNOLOGY

• Alos Micrographics Corporation, has developed a compact microfilmer that weighs only 38 pounds and occupies less space than a typewriter. The Simplex Camera 16 will film documents of all types and colors that can be sheet-fed into the camera. Maximum document size is 11 by 17 inches. The resolution is very high—over 1p/mm. Contact Alos Micrographics Corp., P.O. Box 407, Walden, NY 12586; (914) 778-7511.

• Barcode Industries has introduced special versions of its MindReader series of bar code readers that are compatible with online library systems. Models MR-200 and MR-230 may be used for terminals on OCLC systems and Model MR-300 is to be used with the CLSI system. The readers automatically recognize and decode all popular symbologies, including Codabar and Code 39, the two most widely used in library systems. The readers can be equipped with contact light pens or a table-mounted laser scanner. Prices range from $595 to $740. Contact Barcode Industries, Inc., 17 Barstow Road, Great Neck, NY 11021; (516) 466-5770.

• CLSI's LIBS 100 System, an integrated library automation system, now has the capability of processing codes generated by Chinese, Japanese and Korean (CJK) language data entry. The system was demonstrated at the IFLA Convention last summer in Chicago on an RLG CJK Terminal developed by the Transtech International Corporation. CLSI and Transtech are developing the LIBS 100/CJK for libraries in Taiwan and other East Asian markets. Transtech's new terminal, SINO-TERM III, with the specific capabilities required of a local data entry and inquiry terminal, will be used in the library system. The final product will be introduced upon completion of negotiations with the Research Libraries Group concerning the use of RLG's East Asian Character Code. The uniqueness of Transtech's SINOTERM approach lies in the definition of a set of 245 basic ideograms and a set of typing rules following the natural writing stroke sequence of Chinese characters. The 179-key keyboard can create 13,000 Chinese characters (classical and simplified), including Japanese Kanji and Chinese as used in Korea. Additionally, 150 Japanese Kana and 1,900 Korean characters may be composed, and other characters can be added as required. For more information, contact CL Systems, Inc., 1220 Washington Street, West Newton, MA 02165; (617) 965-6310.

• The Design of Interactive Computer Displays:

A Guide to the Select Literature, edited by Kate McGee (692 pages, July 1985), is the first volume in a set of four reference books that will make up a complete guide to significant information sources on computer display design. The book reviews 301 titles from several disciplines, including engineering technology, computer graphics, cartography, and perceptual and cognitive science. With an emphasis on the user-computer interaction, the book covers equipment limits and potentials, the information presented on-screen, and the user's constraints and capabilities. The book costs $125 and may be ordered from the Report Store, 910 Massachusetts St., Suite 503, Lawrence, KS 66044; (913) 842-7348. ISBN 0-916313-08-5.
