LOUIS A. KENNEY, San Diego State University librarian since 1961, has retired.

When Kenney arrived at San Diego State in 1961 the library was housed in quarters of about 135,000 square feet and offered students a selection of some 210,000 volumes. The staff consisted of thirty-one professional librarians and eighteen support staff. Today the San Diego Library building has 300,000 square feet of space and more than 750,000 volumes. The staff has grown to more than 150 budgeted positions, including fifty professional staff.

Kenney, who holds the B.S.L.S. and M.S.L.S. degrees from the University of Illinois and a Ph.D. in history from the University of Maryland, served on the staff of the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, library for six years as assistant engineering librarian, acquisitions bibliographer, and serials cataloger. He was head acquisitions librarian at the University of Notre Dame from 1948 to 1954, chief of technical services at the Illinois State Library in Springfield from 1957 to 1959, and chief librarian, Institute of Technology, Wright Patterson Air Force Base, from 1959 to 1961.

He has been a member of the council of the California Library Association (CLA), president of CLA's San Diego Chapter, and a member of ALA and ACRL committees.

TOM KIRK, who had been science librarian at Earlham College since 1965 and was on leave this past year to serve as acting director, Library/Learning Center, University of Wisconsin-Parkside, became college librarian at Berea College, Berea, Kentucky, on July 1.

Perhaps the most astute administrative move I ever made at Earlham was convincing Tom, who was then a student assistant in the library and intending to become a biology teacher, that after graduation he should become Earlham's science librarian and attend library school during the summers. That he did, and even before he got his M.L.S. from Indiana University in 1969, it was apparent he was going to have an impact on academic librarianship.

Earlham's Science Library was becoming a model for many colleges, and Tom soon became known throughout the country for his work in bibliographic instruction. He has served as chair of both ALA's Instruction in the Use of Libraries Committee and the ACRL Bibliographic Instruction Task Force, and was instrumental in preparation of the "Guidelines for Bibliographic Instruction in Academic Libraries," approved as policy by the ACRL Board in 1977. He has spoken at many programs and workshops, has taught at the Indiana University Graduate Library School, and serves on several editorial boards. He has published numerous articles and is the author of several books, the latest of which are Library Research Guide to Biology (Pierian Press, 1978) and Course-Related and Literature-Use Instruction: Working Models for Programs in Undergraduate Science Education (Jeffrey Norton, 1979). Currently he is chair of ACRL's Science and Technology Section.

It is with mixed feelings that I write all this. On the one hand, I am delighted for Tom. Berea has a fine library, and the college administration is eager to make it an excellent one, one that will play an increasingly important role in Berea's impressive educational program. In the effort to accomplish that and to insure the efficient and effective administration of the library, Tom was an obvious choice, and there's no question that he'll do a superb job in achieving Berea's goals. Moreover, Berea provides the kind of community in which Tom and his wife, Betsy, can be as active as they were at Earlham.

On the other hand, we'll miss Tom. Not only did he make an important contribution to the education and training of Earlham science students (and faculty), but he also played an unusually active and significant role in many areas of college life and administration. For me, he has been not only a good friend, but also a constant source of support and inspiration. What the Earlham library is today, what I have been able to accomplish, is in large part due to him. I only hope he'll have someone who'll be as helpful, as creative, and as much fun to be with as he was for me.—Evan Ira Farber.

The REMARC Database

The MARC program has enabled librarians everywhere to benefit from access to about one-sixth of LC's total cataloging efforts. REMARC offers access to the remaining five-sixths.

You know the contents of the more than one million MARC records. Here's what the more than five million REMARC records will contain:

pre-1968 materials in all languages.

1968-1971 materials in all languages other than English,

1972-1973 materials in all languages other than English and French,

1973-1974 materials in all languages other than English, French, Spanish and Portuguese and,

1975-1978 materials in all languages using other than the Roman alphabet.

Libraries, service bureaus, and other customers will receive "hit" records (which match libraries' holdings) on a quarterly basis beginning October, 1980. Production will proceed at a rate of some 1.4 million records per year until the scheduled completion date in 1984.

The main database covers all LC records cataloged prior to December 31, 1978. Annual supplements will update the collection.

The records will be offered online via established telecommunications services, and offline on magnetic tape, COM, computer printout, and catalog cards. They may be purchased directly from Carrollton Press or indirectly through service bureaus, networks, or circulation control systems contractors.

for your library

... now is the time to find out how far
THE REMARC DATABASE
can take you.

You may want to start sooner.

The REMARC Record

REMARC records are designed for use in both online catalogs and circulation control/ILL systems.

Although it will not contain all of the detailed data in a full MARC record, the REMARC record will include the following items in MARC format: complete main entry; including author's dates and other descriptors; full title up to the first major punctuation; edition statement; place of publication; publisher; date of publication; designation of transliterated entries; full tracings, including subject, series, title, and author added entries (each tagged separately); complete LC call number (including brackets and suffixes); the full LC card number; and finally, the most common diacritical marks will be included on main entries, titles, and tracings (for printout on equipment with appropriate character sets). In the case of non-Roman records, only those fields which have been transliterated will be included.

In offline retrospective conversion projects, the price per record will vary with the size of the collection and with the method of identifying the non-MARC records to be converted. In most cases however, this price should not exceed fifty cents per "hit" (the transfer of the REMARC record (on magnetic tape) to a library or its service bureau for use within a specified constituency). The prices for abbreviated records and offline printouts should be even lower.
