What could be more effective art education than viewing the originals in museums?

Nothing . . . but you can't always get there. And if you do, what you want to see isn't always on exhibit. And if it is, your feet, a crowd or a museum guard interferes.

Now, along with twenty masterpieces of 20th Century American Art from the Whitney Museum, you can have Chromographic™ Art Editions of pre-1900 Impressionists from the Art Institute of Chicago. Eight major Impressionists are represented in this limited, numbered edition.

A new electronic method called Chromography re-creates paintings in such exact detail that experts find it difficult to tell the Chromograph from the original. One difference is the size, which has been deliberately modified at the suggestion of museum officials "to avoid possible confusion."

To see an actual Chromograph, simply fill out and mail the coupon.
