Notes on Contributors

Sébastien Béland is a lecturer at Université de Montréal, Canada. His research interests are in the field of learning assessment and evaluation, and revolve around measurement models in education, item response theory, missing data, Bayesian approaches, detection of aberrant response patterns, and differential item functioning.

Adriana Biedroń received her doctoral and postdoctoral degrees in applied linguistics from Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań, Poland in 2003 and 2013, respectively. She is a professor in the English Philology Department at the Pomeranian University in Słupsk, Poland. Her fields of interest include applied psycholinguistics and second language acquisition theory. Her research focuses on individual differences in SLA, in particular, on foreign language aptitude and cognitive and personality factors in gifted L2 learners. Her most important publications are "Working memory and short-term memory abilities in accomplished multilinguals" (with Anna Szczepaniak, 2012, The Modern Language Journal) and Cognitive-affective profile of gifted adult foreign language learners (2012, Wydawnictwo Naukowe Akademii Pomorskiej w Słupsku).

Thomas Lockley is Assistant Professor at the Nihon University College of Law, Tokyo, Japan. He has worked in a wide variety of educational contexts for the past 15 years including primary, secondary and tertiary institutions in Britain and Japan. In all contexts, he has attempted to introduce culturally focused learning and teaching methods, in particular, those conforming to the principles of Content and Language Integrated Learning (CLIL). Research interests include cross-cultural integration, educational contexts, learner self-concept and CLIL.

Simone E. Pfenninger, PhD, is a Senior Research and Teaching Associate at the English Department of the University of Zurich, Switzerland. Her principal research areas are multilingualism, psycholinguistics and the age factor in SLA, especially in regard to quantitative approaches and statistical methods and techniques for language application in education. She is currently conducting research into early vs. late learning of multiple foreign languages and the cognitive and psycholinguistic mechanisms that drive language change. Her work is published in several books, edited volumes and in journals such as International Journal of Multilingualism and International Journal of Bilingual Education and Bilingualism. She has been involved in EFL in Switzerland for nine years at different levels: secondary school, adult education, higher education, assessment of processes and outcomes in language education, and language policy.
